SACRAMENTO, July 5.—Lifting the mortgage from the old homestead has yielded as a home town pasture to lifting the mortgage from the municipal roof, according to the report issued today by State Controller Ray L. Riley. A pasture in which the city of Redwood City has joined quite recently.

A jump in the aggregate bonded debt of California municipalities from $65,573,033.51 in 1911 to a grand total of $329,834,041.09 in 1927 is noted in the Riley statement, and indicates the weight of the civic mortgage.

The only rosy side to this debt cloud is that during the same period the cities reported a gain of from $1,464,253,127 to $4,578, in the value of non-operative property within the confines of the state's 283 cities.

Redwood City in a spirit of civic pride bonded itself for the betterment of the city, according to Riley, and still carries a bonded indebtedness of $285,842.70. But the city is already engaged in "lifting the municipal mortgage," a payment of $17,828.70 on the bonded debt being made during the last year in addition to interest in the amount of $12,690.00, according to the state controller.

California cities are making large payments on their debts, some $11,776,655.33 being applied on the redemption of bonds last year, while over fifteen and a half million was paid out for interest on municipal bonds.

Death Ends Sentence of Dr. Northcott

Death brought an end this week to the sentence that Dr. Ephraim Northcott was serving in San Quentin prison, where he had been taken following his contracting pneumonia in a prison road camp. Dr. Northcott was sentenced from this county in 1919 for the murder of Miss Inez Reed, an army nurse. His conviction followed a sensational trial which attracted wide attention and was second only to the Hightower case in the annals of the court of this county.

ALCOHOL TO SHORE AT HALF MOON

Perhaps it will never be definitely determined what the wild waves are saying, but residents of the coastside of San Mateo county are sure they know what makes the wild waves wild. During the week end ten gallon kegs of alcohol began to drift ashore along the coast between Montara and Purisima. It is estimated that no less than 100 of these kegs have been found along the coast.

CLUBELECTS OFFICERS

The annual meeting of the Sequoia Athletic Club was held Saturday evening at the high school at which time the election of officers took place. Louis Lodi was elected secretary to succeed E. W. Witte. Walter S. Nichols was elected secretary to succeed Pedderson and Amerigo Rossi was elected treasurer.

A meeting of the club has been called for tomorrow evening at which time many important matters will be taken up. It has been found that the formation of a community athletic club which has been much discussed lately would be unwise at this time and the efforts of both organizations will be fused in the Sequoia Athletic Club, which aims to interest the businessmen in athletic events.

A dinner at the Cafe de Paris is scheduled for Wednesday evening to be followed by a get-together meeting when plans for promoting the interest of athletics here will be discussed.

Y.M.I. Wins Game With Craft Club

By JOHN RYAN

With Joe Britschgi on a batting spree and "Brick" Allain dispensing a neat variety of curves, the Redwood Council, Young Men's League baseball team had little trouble in routing the Craft Club nine from San Francisco by a 5 to 0 score on the Sequoia diamond last Sunday morning.

All-Britschgi's men got off to a flying start in the first inning, when Bill Brook singled and came home on Britschgi's long triple. Not content with this shout Britschgi proceeded to steal the show, a la Babe Ruth, in the seventh frame when he belted a circuit clout, Brooks and Bartolomei were on the bases when it happened.

Joe has not been up to snuff at the plate in the previous Y. M. I. games but if Sunday's exhibition is an indication of what he is going to do in the future games his batting average is going skyward.

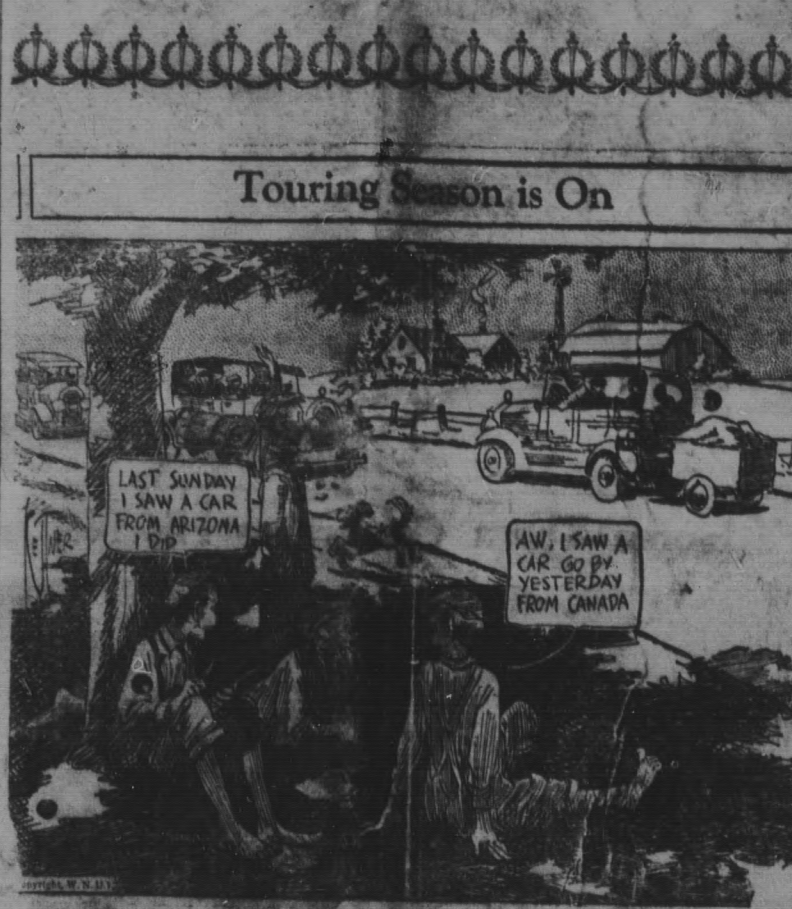

"Tick" Hallett, Redwood's mound artist, was not among those present Sunday on account of an infected hand. His place on the hill was ably filled by "Brick" Allain. Although pitching his first game of the season the crafty red head held the visitors to three puny hits fanned eight, and issued but one base on balls.

Due to Hallett's absence several shifts in the line-up were necessary. "Toots" Johnson held down Allain's regular place in the short patch, while Arnie Jansing replaced Johnson at second. Dannie Poey was mustered into right field, Bartolomei, fiery backstop, gathered two hits and played a bang-up game behind the bat.

The Redwood team displayed a form superior to that shown in their past performances and the large crowd of fans enjoyed a well played game.

"Peasy" Chaves as arbiter and announcer performed to the entire satisfaction of the bleacherites.

The second game of the three games series between Halfmoon Bay and Redwood Council for the Holland and Molkenbuhr Trophy, originally scheduled to take place next Sunday has been postponed one week. The two teams cross bats at Halfmoon Bay on Sunday afternoon, July 15th. Local fans, who are planning to make the trip to the coastside city are assured of a hard fought contest.

REDWOOD HAS FUTURE IN AVIATION

That Redwood City possesses the qualifications of being an industrial airport city, was the statement made by Edward J. Moffett, president of the Pacific Aero Club of San Francisco before members of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce Monday.

Moffett stated that it is now only necessary to take advantage of the natural qualifications which the city already possesses to make this one of the aviation centers of the United States.

When this county was preparing for war, Moffett stated, this city, because of its geographical and climatic advantages was selected as one of the best locations in the United States for aviation work.

The meeting of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce was devoted to a discussion of the aviation question, and beside Moffett, a number of aviators who at one time or another have been connected with the field here were present and expressed their views in regard to the process of developing an air center here.

Among the flyers present were Sam Purcell, Bob Fowler, Harry Christensen and Willard Brown. Chas. G. Lambert was chairman of the meeting.

Moffett stated that the Pacific Aero Club plans an aviation day here in the near future which will surpass anything of its kind heretofore attempted. Not only is it planned to have the latest in aviation equipment on display, but many relics of the past, dating from the infancy of the industry will be shown.

The Chamber of Commerce through the president, E. B. Hillman, assured the flyers that all efforts would be used by the chamber of commerce to assist them in making this occasion a success.

CITY QUIET ON FOURTH

The Fourth of July this year was quiet and eventless compared to the same day in past years. Not one fire alarm was sounded and no accidents were reported. This was due in a large measure to the action of the local police in stopping the sale of fire crackers.

In spite of the precautions of the police, however, some cracklers were sold and fired. But great care was taken and most of the shooting was done at night when the dew helped to lessen the chances of fires.

One arrest was made by the police for violation of the anti-firecracker ordinance. Ming Sang Chinese laundryman of Maple street, was arrested by Officer Thorpe for selling firecrackers.

He appeared before City Judge Mansfield who set his bail at $100.00.

JUDGE HUDNER PASSES AWAY AT HOSPITAL

Death Follows
Long Illness
And Suffering

WAS WELL-KNOWN JURIST

Often Presided Over
Superior Court Here

Judge John L. Hudner, since 1913 sitting at times for Judge Buck and holding extra sessions of the superior court on numerous occasions, passed away at St. Francis hospital, San Francisco, yesterday, following a long illness. Yesterday morning he was operated upon for a kidney disorder but did not long survive the operation.

Judge Hudner was born in San Benito county about seventy-two years ago. He graduated with honors from Santa Clara University in the early seventies, going at once to Hollister, where he studied and practiced law until 1913, when he was appointed superior judge of San Benito county to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the late Judge Maurice Dooling, who was appointed Judge of the Federal Court by President Wilson.

Judge Hudner was one of the most prominent jurists of the state, having occupied the bench at various times in numerous counties of California with distinction. Judge Hudner was acquainted one of the ablest and creditable jurists of the commonwealth. He was widely known in this city and county, frequently sitting for Judge Buck in cases where the latter was disqualified and in special hearings. Two years ago his Alma Mater conferred upon him the honorary degree of Juris Doctor on account of his great learning and success in the law, an honor which he highly prized.

The Judge leaves large holdings in San Benito county, accumulated from his extensive law practice. He is survived by his wife, a daughter and two sons, all living at Hollister.

The flag at the courthouse will be at half mast tomorrow in honor of the famous jurist, who for fifteen years was a prominent figure in Redwood City.

Beltramo plead guilty in the court and asked that sentence be given immediately. He paid the fine and was released.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

California's (oil) estimated daily average production increased 2,000 barrels during the week ended June 22, it was officially reported by the American Petroleum Institute. The total estimated daily average crude oil production for the week of the report was 645,500 barrels as compared with 643,500 barrels for the week ended June 16.

By way of affording the taxpayers something cheerful to think about, the California Tax Commission announced that it doesn't intend to increase state government revenues. Just what the commission does intend to urge hasn't been revealed as yet, but fears of a year ago that new income would be necessary apparently have been set at rest, at least for the present. "The commission," says Chairman Irving Martin of Stockton, "is not proceeding on the theory that the state needs a lot more revenue."

Urging upon California the need for voting next November the $6,500,000 state park bond issue provided for by the 1927 legislature, conservationists of national reputation at San Francisco recently at the 8th national conference on state parks. "This year's conference was held in California for the direct purpose of helping pass the state park bond issue," said Chairman Mather. "The beauties of a state are wasted unless they are made available for the people of the state and its visitors."

With the California highway budget for the 1929-30 biennium now being drafted by the state division of highways, Bert B. Meek, state director of public works, announced that road improvement will proceed along much the same lines as during the present two-year period. It is estimated that the state's highway income for the fourth coming biennium will total between $50,000,000 and $55,000,000. The director disclosed that it is his desire to have right-of-ways on the two main north-south routes and important laterals of the state brought up to a maximum right-of-way width of 100 feet.

California's 1929 auto license plate will be bigger, heavier, and in colors of deep yellow and dull black. They will have three times the visibility of the present gold and blue plates and will be modeled after the present New York auto plate style. The letters of the alphabet are to be used so that the first plate number reads 1-A-1. The plates then will run to 2-A-9999, which will give the division of motor vehicles a run of 20,000 numbers. The lettering then changes and the first of the next series will be 1-B-1 and so on through the alphabet to 2-Z-9999. The letters I, O and Q will be eliminated, due to similarity to numerals.

Earthquake movements in California earthquake regions will soon be accurately measured. A surveying party engaged in measuring Mt. Whitney has passed the 10,000-foot level, according to the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and will reach the summit next month. Metal tablets set in rock at frequent intervals along the line of levels, giving the elevation, will now furnish a basis for detecting the direction and amount of change in elevation in case of earthquakes in that region. The present leveling is part of a five-year Coast and Geodetic Survey study of California earthquake regions.

First steps toward acquisition of the Calaveras and South Calaveras big tree groves as state park lands were accomplished a few days ago with the announcement that part of the territory will ultimately be donated by the federal government. The Calaveras big tree association, announced Fred Stevenot, state director of natural resources, has urged the state park commission to consider purchase of approximately 9,000 acres privately owned in the groves. A bill sponsored in Congress by Senator Hiram W. Johnson and Congressman Harry L. Englebright he added, allows federal contribution of 1,100 acres additionally if the groves are adopted as a state park during the next six years.

From Oregon to the Mexican line the 300 and more posts of the American Legion of California will observe with fitting ceremony the nation's 152nd birthday, July 4. The World War veterans of Tuolumne County are planning to conduct a union meeting at Malone Lake, where Lieutenant Governor Burton R. Pitts will be the speaker. At San Jacinto John R. Quinn, former national commander of the legion, will be the speaker of the day. Department Commander Phil Dodson will fill several engagements in the south, while State Adjutant General James K. Plisk is to speak at Oakland's airport. At Banning the legionnaires will dedicate the local airport made possible by their own efforts.

California export trade increased $21,943,062 in 1927, a Department of Commerce annual bulletin announced last week. Exports were valued at $309,544,746, compared with $287,601,484 during 1926. Gasoline, ranked first in value among commodities sent to foreign markets during 1927. Gas and fuel oil, cotton, oranges, raisins, barley, prunes, sardines, canned peaches, crude petroleum and lumber followed in order named. California ranked fourth among states in value of exports last year, being topped by New York, Texas and Michigan.

California's state government has nothing against football, but last week it officially declined to consider it a substitute for algebra and English grammar. Attorney General U. S. Webb ruled that when a high school boy is battling on the gridiron, he can not, by any flight of the imagination, be legally regarded as in attendance at school. State apportionment of funds to public schools is based on average daily attendance, and what Webb said about weekday football also goes for track meets, baseball games, band contests and school picnics.

Thomas Fox, 71, Democratic leader for half a century and chairman of the Sacramento County Central Committee of his party for more than thirty years, died at Sacramento last week after an illness of several months. Fox served three terms as Sacramento postmaster during the administrations of President Cleveland and Wilson.

State highway projects under contract or to which funds have been obligated involve a total expenditure of $12,215,000 for the first fiscal year of Governor Young's administration, ending June 30. Bert B. Meek, state director of public works, told the governor's cabinet last week that the total includes $5,187,500 devoted to new highway construction and approximately $7,027,500 for reconstruction work. The new undertakings, provided for with the increased gasoline tax, have all been started since January 1.

Women who offend against California laws may be provided with long tenure leases on homes in Merced County, it appears at present. Negotiations for a site for a new women's prison are under way between the state commission on a site for a prison and the State Land Settlement Board for land between Cressey and Ballico, in Merced County, it has been reported.

California faces the probable loss of approximately $5,000,000 a year in taxes of state and national banks, unless the present state taxation plan is changed. This statement, giving additional support to reports that the California Tax Commission will urge a special session of the legislature this summer, was made the other day by State Controller Ray L. Riley, member of the commission.

Two mural paintings costing the state $20,000 will be installed in the south capitol extension building, at Sacramento, the state librarian announced last week. One painting is to be placed in Memorial vestibule, dedicated to soldiers of all wars, and the other will be placed in the library. The first is to be done by Frank Van Sloun, San Francisco, while the second will be the work of Maynard Dixon, Western artist.

The new German dirigible, LZ-127, may make a trip to east Asia by way of California. Dr. Hugo Eckener, Zepplin builder, in addressing visiting members of the German Foreign Institute, at Friedrichshafen, Germany, said that if his scheduled flight to America in August fulfilled all expectations, he was planning at the beginning of October to continue westward with stops in California and eastern Asia.

With Senator Hiram W. Johnson virtually unopposed, the only prospective August primary contest among aspirants to the United States Senate appears to be a fight between prohibitionist, Charles H. Randall, Los Angeles prohibitionist, has filed for Republican honors against Senator Johnson, but later he found himself facing an opponent for the nomination of his own party. The Secretary of State's office announced receipt of word that Wiley J. Phillips of Los Angeles will also seek the prohibitionist nomination. Other qualified Senatorial candidates are Lena Morrow Lewis, San Francisco Socialist, and Minor Moore, Los Angeles Democrat.

Some idea of the rapid increase in the number of airplane landing fields on the Pacific Coast is given by the Standard Oil directory just issued. In this volume are listed and described the 263 landing fields that now exist, in contrast to the 144 fields listed in last year's directory. In California the number of fields has more than doubled, there having been 71 last June and 149 now. It is also announced in the directory that Standard Oil Company of California will soon be operating three giant 10,000-candlepower beacons at Portland, Seattle and San Diego. Like beacons are now established at Mt. Diablo and in the hills near Los Angeles.

California will receive during the fiscal year 1929 approximately $3,600,000 out of the $32,000,000 which Congress authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to obligate for improving roads on the Federal aid system and within the national forests. The authorization is composed of $75,000,000 federal aid and $7,500,000 for national forest roads and trails. Similar amounts were also approved to be later authorized for fiscal years 1930 and 1931.

With the State Veterans' Welfare Board now buying homes and farms for California's ex-service men at a cost of approximately a million dollars a month, over 200 veterans will receive home loans this month, George M. Stout, secretary of the board, announced recently. During the next six months the six and a half millions remaining of the $30,000,000 veterans' home and farm aid bonds voted by the people will be spent in filling the thousands of requests on file with the board, according to Stout. A grand total of $25,519,594.84 has already been expended by the Veterans' Board, the purchases in the month of May reaching the high mark of $950,745.

Formation of a general state committee of experts to aid county governments in drawing up model plans for hospitals, detention homes and jails is proposed by Mrs. Anna L. Saylor, state director of social welfare. The state, through such an arrangement, can and should assist county authorities in providing public institutions which will assure proper care, social welfare and safety of inmates, Mrs. Saylor contends. The proposed general advisory committee will include architects, sheriffs, judges, engineers and physicians.

However interested medical science may be in ascertaining the exact causes of the deaths of state hospital patients, autopsies are permissible only with the consent of relatives of the deceased. Mentioning violent deaths requiring coroner's inquests as exceptions to the rule, Attorney General U. S. Webb, in an opinion to the Department of Institutions, points out that "our state legislature has not seen fit to clothe its officers or managers of state hospitals with authority to perform autopsies except in the instances cited."

POULTRY

REMOVE ROOSTERS FROM HEN FLOCKS

Now that the hatching season is over and fertile eggs are no longer needed, every poultryman should remove all of the male birds from his flock. For, says C. S. Platt, assistant poultry husbandman at the New Jersey experiment station, the production of fertile eggs for market purposes is never desirable, though it cannot be avoided during the hatching season.

On many farms there is a desire to keep over some of the better cockerels and the temptation is to allow these to remain in the flock. The number retained, however, should be reduced to a minimum by careful selection. When this is done the few that are kept should be segregated. It must be remembered that a new crop of cockerels will be reared during the coming season and good, vigorous cockerels are usually better than older birds anyway.

The exception exists on those farms practicing pedigree mating. Where this is done it is absolutely necessary to keep over all of the male birds until one knows what their daughters have done. A proved male is practically priceless and as one cannot determine in advance exactly what his daughters will do it becomes necessary to keep the birds over until they have had a chance to show their ability.

Male birds that are kept should be given plenty of sunshine, green food, and yellow corn. They will not need much animal protein. A free range and whole yellow corn fed twice daily will take care of their needs until the next breeding season. If kept confined, cod-liver oil should be provided in addition to the corn and green food. One per cent in the grain would provide sufficient oil. Under confined conditions it will also be necessary to be on the watch for lice and mites all of the time. These can be kept under control by painting the roosts with a carbolineum product and by dusting the birds with sodium fluoride.

Fatten Broilers Before Sending Them to Market

Profitable gains usually will be made by broilers that are fattened for a period of two weeks before they are sold. However, one should not expect to fatten broilers for longer than a two weeks' period, as the gains will not be rapid and profits are likely to disappear. Cockerels should be separated from the pullets and confined to a small yard. A roosting shed should be provided for the fattening birds.

A satisfactory mash mixture for fattening broilers is one composed of two parts of cornmeal and one part wheat middlings. This should be mixed with milk and fed for fifteen to twenty-minute periods three times daily. A liberal feeding of cracked corn should be given late in the afternoon. If liquid milk is available, it can be kept before the birds during the fattening period and no water need be given. Plenty of water should be provided if no milk is fed.

Slow-Feathering Chicks Common in Some Breeds

"Slow feathering or 'naked' chicks are quite common in general purpose breeds, and sometimes occur in the lighter breeds," says Prof. C. W. Currier, Purdue university. "Such chicks are usually those that lack the vigor necessary to grow rapidly but chicks may also become stunted from improper feed, chilling, or crowded conditions during the first few weeks of their lives. 'Whatever the cause may be, little can be done to make such chickens profitable. If pullets, they lay poorly and are likely to be susceptible to disease. They should be marked with leg bands when five or six weeks old, and marketed as soon as they reach sufficient size, otherwise they may feather out slowly and be kept in the flock to produce similar chicks next season."

By constantly culling out these low-vitality chicks, one can practically eliminate them in the future offspring.

Good Laying Mash

A farmer who raises corn, wheat, and oats can work them into a good laying mash. It can consist of 100 pounds of ground corn, 100 pounds of ground oats, 200 pounds of ground wheat and 100 pounds of meat scrap. The addition of 2 per cent bone meal, 2 per cent ground limestone and 1 per cent fine salt will furnish minerals. Adding 50 pounds of bran to the 500 pounds of mash helps to give it more bulk, when ground wheat is used in place of bran and middlings.

Prevent Diseases

It is an established fact that most of the tuberculosis in fowls is found in the older birds. When the older birds are eliminated, the principal spreaders of tuberculosis are eliminated. Therefore the sale of birds after they have completed most of their first year laying cycle is not only the method of securing the high production per hen but also a method of helping to prevent spread of disease such as tuberculosis and other ailments.

Infertile Eggs Best

Eggs are one of the largest factors in poultry profits and as they deteriorate rapidly in hot weather they must have good care to bring the highest prices. If you have roosters in your flock get rid of them. Fertile eggs cannot bring the prices that infertile ones do for they spoil too quickly. If you want to keep your roosters for next year's breeding, build a park for them where they will have shade, and give them plenty of feed and clean, fresh water.

Woodside

Many delightful children's parties have been given in Woodside during the last few weeks but the most enjoyable of them all was a party given by Col. Daniel C. Jackson on the Fourth. Fifty of the children of Woodside were invited to the affair and they arrived in the early afternoon. Games were had on the numerous lawns with a fine display of daylight fireworks. At a clock dinner was served in the patio of the big spanish house. The youngsters stood at salute during the playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner," and then proceeded to do full justice to the feast.

In the evening there was exhibited the most elaborate display of fireworks to which Woodside has been treated. Colored lights burned among the great oaks covering several acres, casting weird shadows into the distance, looking like a gypsy encampment or a gathering of Robin Hood's men in Sherwood Forest. The bombs, rockets, fire mountains and helicopters were fired from the tennis court and the colors were reflected in almost equal brightness from the surface of the swimming pool in the foreground. When the display ended with a great American flag burning brightly in its original colors, the youngsters wended their way homeward with a day behind them that will live in their memories for many years.

James Huddart was host on the same day to sixty of his friends, most of them from San Francisco, who spent a delightful day among the great redwood groves of his beautiful estate.

Dr. and Mrs. Alanson Weeks left on Saturday last to be away more than a month. Mrs. Weeks and her daughter, Leone, will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Gallagher at their summer home on one of the Thousand Islands in the St. Lawrence river and Dr. Weeks is off for Alaska.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hellman and Mr. and Mrs. Russell Slade left on Monday for a two weeks camping trip into the high Sierras.

Prof. Robert E. Daugherty, professor of engineering at the California Institute of Technology, was a guest of Dr. Bradford Leavitt on Sunday. Dr. Leavitt is temporarily filling the pulpit of the First Congregational church in Oakland but by the middle of the month he will start on Honolulu on a trip that will take the rest of his vacation.

REPREASURING SAVES GAS

(By Capitol News Bureau)
SACRAMENTO, July 5.—While repressuring of natural gas in southern California oil fields has resulted in saving of 28,500,000 cubic feet daily, 250,000,000 cubic feet daily is being thrown off into the air, Fred G. Stevenot, director of natural resources, announced today, but there are hopes of greater conservation of this valuable fuel.

Injections chiefly are being made in the Ventura and Kern fields, where 74,530,000 and 6,000,000 cubic feet daily is being forced back into the ground, not only as a conservation measure, but to give renewed pressure to oil in those districts, Stevenot reported.

Burglar Sought By Sheriff's Office

A burglar shortly after midnight yesterday morning entered the home of Mrs. Ellen Fife at Atherton, and while prowling about the house awakened that lady. Mrs. Fife's 16-year-old daughter, Betty Shortridge, screamed, and the burglar ran out of the house.

A call was sent to the Atherton police and Officer Stanley Woods investigated the case and reported to the sheriff's office.

Acting Sheriff Ed Farrell, who has made a study of criminal identification, made a search of the premises and secured several good finger prints. It is believed by the sheriff's office that these may result in apprehending the burglar. Mrs. Fife was not able to say yesterday whether anything was missing from her home or not.

INDEPENDENCE

IN 1876, one hundred years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the first telephone circuit was installed on the Pacific Coast. This marked the beginning of a new freedom—freedom from the bonds of distance.

For today, distance is not a barrier to the transmission of thought by speech. The last half century has seen the development of the telephone from small beginnings to a vast network of voice highways extending throughout the length and breadth of the nation.

From your own telephone you are within speaking distance of over 70,000 cities and towns throughout the United States and many points in Mexico, Canada and Europe.

The Colfax Bookplate

By AGNES MILLER

© by The Century Co.

SYNOPSIS

On a certain Monday morning Miss Constance Fuller, seller of rare books at Darrow's Bookshop, New York, notices that the first customer is a dignified old gentleman, who examines the alcove placard "Medical Works." Peter Burton, one of the employees, explains to her by telling her he paid $510 for an old law book containing a Colfax bookplate. But a girl's shriek of "Murder!" rings out. The elderly customer is on the floor unconscious, with his right wrist slashed. Just before the shrieking girl falls in a faint, she calls out to Peter: "Keep it! Keep it to me!" Peter's sister, Nancy, began that morning working at Darrow's. Nancy tells Constance of her engagement to Brandon Tower, an eloquent young man who was out short when Tower attempted to make off with the girl's suitcase. Constance explains Darrow's card-index system to Captain Ashland, a nephew of Mr. Darrow's. The explanation of the bookplate paid $510 for and the bookplate to be a forgery. Constance is asked to assist Detective Almy in his investigation of the murder of the elderly gentleman. The girl who fainted, Julia Grosvenor, turns out to be his granddaughter. She can throw no light on the mystery. Constance removes the bookplate from the old law book and discovers a small key secreted in a hollow on the cover. She makes other discoveries, too. The next day it is discovered that the book has been taken from a locked drawer in Constance's desk.

"On examining the bookplate with a magnifying glass, I noticed on it an object that bore the same pattern—in miniature, of course—as the arrangement of those sixteen slits you see on that paper. I took the object as some kind of surgical instrument, as it was on a table with others I could identify, such as the scalpel. This instrument had sixteen slits, six down the center, a row of five on each side of the central row."

"All the same slits?" asked Mr. Roberts, eyeing the yellow note again.

"Yes, just as those slits are."

"What did this instrument look like?"

"A small, cube-shaped box, I can't even guess its purpose. It has what I take for a handle on the back, and something that looks like a small lever, on top. But, since this instrument appears on the bookplate in this book which conceals a key, and on this yellow slip, picked up just before the accident, there is found identical the pattern on the instrument. I fancy there's some connection among all these facts."

"Tell me about this key," said Mr. Roberts.

I described how it was fastened into the book cover, and made a rough sketch of it, also, of the instrument drawn on the bookplate, which he then recollected having seen the day before. I related how I had heard the time-clock ring twice in the course of the past evening, at twenty minutes past seven o'clock and at a quarter past ten; how, directly after the second time, I had seen Mr. Case and the stranger standing below me, as I waited on the balcony; how the two recognized each other in silence, and how the stranger vanished. I concluded with all the details of the morning, including Mr. Case's asking for the book, and returning it untouched.

"It's most unfortunate you had to be here alone all morning," frowned Mr. Roberts; "but it's time to send for Almy, and tell him all you've discovered, or believe you've discovered, about that book."

"Do you really think it's important?"

"Possibly; at least, something of what you say confirms a fact hitherto held in confidence; to know it now may help you. You saw Mr. Case searching, you believe, for the book which you think an object to so many persons. Well, he was absent from the conference on Monday morning shortly before eleven o'clock; and during that time he was seen to the rear of the bookshop."

The thrill that ran through me was anything but pleasant. Mr. Roberts continued:

"He stepped out of Mr. Darrow's office, saying he wished to get a certain list of books from Miss Wilkes whose office is of course on the fourth floor. A few minutes later he returned with the list, but he was seen during that time coming down the rear gallery stairs into the shop."

"Who saw him?" I demanded.

"Miss Grosvenor. She doesn't know him; but in the course of accounting for her movements, to Almy, she described having seen Mr. Case that way."

"Do you think there was any connection between him and Grosvenor after all?" I hazarded. "I thought he had been told to keep him."

"No; what he said was that he had never seen Mr. Grosvenor in the shop, of you and the other clerks had."

Hired to Fire

"So your boss has hired an efficiency expert."

"Yes, we have a lot of lunkheads on the payroll and the boss is too tender-hearted to discharge them himself."

The Sudden Spurt

"Have you been working here long?"

"Yes, ever since they talked about letting me go."

may be that he did know him. Your statement of his interest in this law book, provided it can be proved that Mr. Grosvenor also had an interest in it, might confirm this idea."

"Why did I lose that book? And who took it?"

"Perhaps Almy can trace it. At all events, we have this note of yours, your statement, and your sketches, to work on. And don't let worrying over past mistakes lead you into further ones. This case isn't growing less troublesome."

"What's happened now?" I faltered apprehensively.

Mr. Roberts looked decidedly disturbed as he replied:

"It has been learned that Miss Grosvenor, in accordance with a frequent custom of hers, visited her grandfather's safe-drawer box last Saturday; she alleges that he sent her, that she delivered to him two thousand dollars in Liberty bonds, which he wanted for some transaction; and a complete memorandum of her numbers was found in his desk, in her writing. But on Wednesday these bonds were sold in the market for Charles MacIvor, her cousin."

"The radio message regarding his grandfather's death could not be delivered. He was not on the ship."

I was thunderstruck. I recalled Ernesto's "She likes him pretty good. I'm sorry," and how Julia herself had told me her cousin had called—how strangely she had spoken of him.

"What does she say?" I finally asked.

"She insists she gave the bonds to her grandfather, and knows nothing further about them."

"Looks bad," said I.

"Yes," said Mr. Roberts.

He had agreed with me! I left the office in a panic.

CHAPTER IX

Nancy was awaiting me at my desk, as it was two minutes past five o'clock. She insisted on my accompanying her forthwith to Normandy terrace, declining my offer to appear tactfully just before dinner.

So we went forth. "Say, who do you think spent last evening with me?" Nancy asked.

"I couldn't guess," I returned, attempting enthusiasm, but really tired out and worried to a point where I didn't care at all.

"Cheer up; you'll be interested when I tell you. It was that Miss Grosvenor who lives downstairs."

"The idea!" I gasped, galvanized into life again. "So soon... really, you oughtn't to... where was—"

"Peter? Gone to Raynes Foreside, you remember. I hope some other time he will have a chance to meet her; she is a nice girl, though not sophisticated. I had met her on the stairs that morning, and introduced myself as a new neighbor, and asked her to come and see me if she felt like society any time, because I always did."

"Doesn't it seem a little soon after her bereavement for her to be making calls on a stranger?" I suggested frigidly.

"No; not under the circumstances. She's been almost alone ever since she got back from the hospital Tuesday. We had a nice time. I made a point of telling her how good Peter was to me, bringing me to that lovely apartment."

"What?"

"And I showed her his picture, and told her how everybody thought such a lot of him at Darrow's. And she told me about her work in the Aldrich studios, which she simply loves. But"

"What?"

"I don't want to go to it," Nancy assured her; "not from this lovely room! I've never seen so much nice furniture; and I know quite a lot about furniture, for one so young. My father has stacks of mahogany four-posters and applewood corner cupboards and banjo clocks. How beautiful!"

"Oh, you don't want to go yet?" protested Julia.

I'm sure she detested her grandfather, then."

"I'm amazed that she should have even hinted such a thing!"

"Do you really think she would have had such rotten taste, especially when he was dead?"

"Then what do you mean by saying she didn't like him?"

"I said I thought not," said Nancy, meekly. "I saw in the paper that he had a million dollars, so of course anybody would have liked him if possible. But she had to work terribly hard, and she never seems to have had any fun. She invited me to go to see her this evening, but I said you were coming to see me; so, as she remembered your name, she said, from having heard that you took care of her when she fainted, she invited you, too."

No, it's not impossible to go, because I have accepted for both of us."

"Perhaps," it occurred to me, "Miss Grosvenor, having extracted the information she desired from me the other day, is now in a mood to give some. The evening may be profitable, after all."

So, after a suitable interval had followed an excellent dinner suitably presided over by Ernesto, I followed Nancy downstairs to the second-story door which, unknown to her, I had entered two days previously. The long room, with its bright ceiling and rosewood furniture, over which lamplight shed a softening glow, made her eyes dance with delight; but she introduced me demurely enough to Julia Grosvenor, who made no reference to having received me before, though she was cordially itself.

Yet soon I felt sure I should never pass an evening more consummately dull. Julia did not mention even the most ordinary of her own affairs, and I could not help wondering if the matter of the vanished bonds had not made her even more secretive than before. I grew wearier and wearier after the sleepless vigil of the night before, and felt increasingly peevish over the wasted evening.

"I fear, Nancy, we've already kept Miss Grosvenor up too late."

would love that enchanting little new ing table!" She indicated the minute table I had noticed on my first visit. "We're nothing like that, though I've seen some in antique shops."

"That's something special, though," returned Julia; "it's just a dummy, a cabinet-maker's model. It's not useful for anything but ornament. My grandfather frequently had such objects made, when he was in the lumber trade, to show off samples of wood. But if you'd like to see something really quaint, I'll show you my pet candle stand I found in five shades of green, that gave me quite a nice idea once for a big lampshade they liked at the studio. Wait just a minute!"

She went off through the door at the rear of the long room, leaving Nancy rapturously beginning another puzzle, and me highly impatient. It was late. Somewhere I had heard, a clock striking eleven, not long before. The silence of Normandy terrace, profound all evening, was now becoming unearthly, particularly for a spot one block from Broadway. Even Nancy sat perfectly quiet, her eyes on her book, as if the night chill had frozen her. And suddenly that strange chill in the air was a cold wind, blowing across the room.

I glanced at the door through which Julia had disappeared. It was shut. I turned swiftly to the French window behind my chair. Slowly, cautiously, it was opening.

Next second a man sprang through it, from the balcony into the shadow between the windows. From beneath his visored cap, his eyes swept the room. I leaped up, so did Nancy, her eyes glittering like chips from a blue glacier. The intruder rushed forward, knocking over the chair from which I had retreated. The rear door burst open, a strange loud click sounded somewhere; but there was no time to shriek a warning before Julia Grosvenor, collapsing against a distant door which, unknown to her, I had entered two days previously. The long room, with its bright ceiling and rosewood furniture, over which lamplight shed a softening glow, made her eyes dance with delight; but she introduced me demurely enough to Julia Grosvenor, who made no reference to having received me before, though she was cordially itself.

Jimmy Dykes Wants Hurling Job

JIMMY DYKES, the round veteran and Jack-of-all trades on the Athletics—the man who can't be placed "wrong" on a baseball diamond—seems quite likely to go through the season of 1929 as a stop-third baseman—first baseman—what is he?—to try his fabled fast ball and his dinky curve against the big league sockers in games that are important in the pennant quest. He is in a fair way to have that ambition gratified, with what results no one knows, writes Bill Dolan in the Philadelphia Record.

The conversion of hard-hitting pitchers into infielders and outfielders is not an uncommon occurrence in baseball, but very few have made the transition from other positions to that of pitching. Bob Smith, a rather light-hitting infielder, with the Boston Braves, made the switch to a utility role to the pitching mound a couple of seasons ago with better than fair results, and Dykes has just as good a chance to make good on the knoll as Smith.

The all-around Mackman, like Smith, has a fine throwing arm—one a mite better than Smith's according to ball players who are familiar with both men—and though Dykes' curve ball may leave a lot to be desired, his "hook" will improve with experience and his speed should fit in nicely in a league that specializes in fast-ball pitching.

Dykes' search for a new position in which to exercise his talents of slugging and heaving baseballs comes as a result of the return of Joe Hauser to big league spangles. This is a happy anticipation for Hauser, and no one is sorry about his return, but every good break must have its victim, and the corpus delicti in this instance is Jimmy Dykes, who diked the hole at first base last season after the gap had cost a number of ball games. Dykes had occupied himself in his previous years of baseball hiking from second base to short to third, according to the need of the moment, and nobody, least of all Jimmy

THE MODERN GIRL
By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

GIRLS are different from what they once were. The first thing we know some girl will take into her head that she will look well in the Presidential chair, and she will pull the strings and play her cards to get the job. Girls didn't run for office when I was young. Sometimes the fellows gave them an unimportant place that no one seemed to care for. It was a courtesy, however, a concession to the weaker sex. It simply showed how generous and unselfish we were. Girls modestly and shyly sat back in the corner and waited until they were asked or brought forward. They were never so rude as to take the initiative.

It is not that way now. What a girl wants these days she goes after. She looks out for number one. She is practical and capable and aggressive and is quite capable of looking after her own interests. She runs for office—any office in fact that she

She doesn't exactly pass out the cigars and set up the drinks—she hasn't got that far yet, but she does hand out the apple sauce, and she gets you into a corner and asks you to vote for her in such a forceful way that there is no resisting her. She takes the lead now where once she sat in the corner and waited for the fellows to come round.

She's tremendously capable. Ethel is teaching school in a country town a hundred miles away and was invited down to a formal party in our town and Nancy asked her to stay with us. She thought her party gown was quite all right until she looked

Curfew Law Threatens to Close Cuba Movies

Havana, Cuba.—Cuban motion picture theater owner, including more than 100 in Havana, threaten to close their theaters in protest against a law recently passed prohibiting children less than fourteen years of age from attending the movies after 8 o'clock at night.

President Machado rescinded the law, but the government may still forbid admission of minors to theaters in the instances of individual film presentations.

PRINTED FROCK

The printed frock this season is not merely a question of "shall I get one?" but "I simply MUST have one!" No wardrobe this summer will be at all complete without at least one printed frock similar to the one shown above, worn by Renee Adoree.

Large prints and small prints, vivid hues and conservatively subdued colors are offered by fashion. This wide variety permits individuality in the printed frocks one chooses today.

The frock worn by Miss Adoree has red as its basic color with a small white flower figure. The neckerchief and ties at the wrist, throat and belt are novel touches.

An all white or an all red felt sports hat makes a fitting complement to be worn with this frock.

Hymn Number Proved Lucky for Gamblers

The latest big winner at Europe's premier gambling resort, Monte Carlo, says Capper's Weekly, was an Englishman, who strolled into the English chapel there Sunday morning and after the first hymn left for the Casino. As he entered the place he heard the number "32" shouted from a roulette table, the same number shouted from another table.

It was the number of the hymn the Englishman had just heard and he decided to "play it." Starting with the equivalent of $5 he won almost every other spin of the wheel and kept piling up his stack until he had $5,000. This, he thought, was tempting the goddess of chance long enough.

The story of the Englishman's winnings went the rounds. The next Sunday, after singing the first hymn, almost the entire congregation left the chapel and rushed off to the Casino to back the hymn's number.

Odd Idea in "Marathons"

Long-distance accordion playing is a current "marathon" fad in Belgium. Walking drummers had the center of the stage for a while, and a man from Maastricht walked forty miles beating a drum all the while. But walking accordion players are more popular. For 40,000 Belgians got sport, music and exercise manipulating the "poor man's piano." Emile Gienneux is the accordion hero. He played his musical bellows all the way from Thion to Brussels and back, about fifty miles, with an hour off for lunch and six hours' sleep at Brussels. The country roads were lined with people cheering the player on his march, and friends walked with him in relays.

Marshal Foch for Sleep

Marshal Foch recently declared that he has found sleep one of his greatest aids. Not only does he preach it, but during the World war and at other times he has practiced it. Foch says that during the dramatic events he has experienced he has never felt worn out. He has always slept well, and even if he were awakened by a subordinate who wanted to inquire about an order, he could go to sleep again immediately afterward.

: Defied Alien Law :

Detroit.—Accused of being responsible for the smuggling of at least 400 aliens from Canada to Detroit during the last 18 months, Casper Hollicker, fifty-two years old, and his daughter, Mrs. Rose Phillippi, thirty-one years old, were arraigned recently on charges of conspiracy to violate the immigration laws and being accessories in aiding the smuggling of aliens.

John L. Zurbrick, district director of immigration, estimated the two were responsible for bringing in 400 aliens here as members of an international ring whose ramifications are believed to extend to Europe.

Both admit, Mr. Zurbrick said, that they have smuggled a number of aliens but gave no exact number. Hollicker, Mr. Zurbrick said, told him that between 50 and 100 aliens whom he added to enter the country illegally now are residing in New York.

Many From His Home

Suspicious of the authorities here were aroused when it was found that in the few months aliens caught illegally entering the country here all seemed to come from Englebrum, a section of Rumania which formerly was part of Austria. Hollicker was born in the district.

Some time ago the authorities were informed that 78 aliens from Englebrum were aboard a steamer bound for Canada. On April 3, 12 and 19, the immigration border patrol apprehended a number of the aliens here, and all showed they were interested in a man named Hollicker.

The women said they paid $75 to be smuggled over the river, while the man said they paid $250. Mrs. Phillippi, Mr. Zurbrick said, claims $75 of that fee was paid the man who brought the woman over the river.

On April 19, Nicholas Titch and his wife, Anna, of Englebrum, were arrested in a taxicab at the foot of 42 Riverfront with Arthur Damon, a smuggler released recently after serving a sentence in the Leavenworth penitentiary for smuggling aliens.

Gave Password.

Titch told the authorities that when he came to Windsor he went to a certain hotel and gave a certain password, whereupon he was told to await an agent of the smuggling ring. The hotel, the authorities say they are informed, got $5 a head for this service.

Hollicker was notified of the aliens' arrival and his daughter came to Windsor and collected $150 from the Titches and told them they would be delivered to her home, Mr. Zurbrick said. The Titches got in a cab at the hotel with Damon.

Hollicker, Mr. Zurbrick said, claims he got $10 to $20 a head for his part in the smuggling. He said, according to the officials, that he shipped the aliens to the East after receiving them at his home.

Farmer, Aged 81, Says He Has Walked 180,000 Miles

Glencoe, Minn.—The record of H. F. Bencke, eighty-one-year-old farmer here, is something for these cross-country runners to ponder over.

Mr. Bencke has clicked off 180,000 miles by foot in the past 17 years and still makes his daily walk.

"I had a full-sized millage ticked off when I was only eleven years old," the pioneer explained. "I walked nearly all the way from a point 20 miles south of Chicago to Glencoe in the summer of 1888. I was a member of a prairie schooner party, but there was no room in the wagons for the men and boys.

"For several years after that I walked frequently from the claim here to St. Paul and back, carrying provisions. During all that time I worked in the fields, and in those days, of course, there were no seats to ride on when working in the field. In fact, there was no farm machine. Later I made from 15 to 20 miles a day plowing and harrowing, and during the rest of the year I reckon that I walked at least five miles a day."

Most of his walking was done with wooden shoes, Bencke said. "We used to wear wooden shoes to St. Paul even in winter and exchange them for leather ones when we neared the town," he declared.

"One time I lost one of my leather shoes while crossing the river from St. Anthony to St. Paul. I didn't like to wear wooden shoes on the streets and tried to buy a pair of buffalo shoes, but couldn't find any to fit me in the St. Paul stores."

Earthen Jars in Arizona Said to Be 2,000 Years Old

Nogales, Ariz.—Ancient earthen jars, containing the bones of a prehistoric race, recently excavated by men working on the city streets, were declared to be more than 2,000 years old by Byron Cummings, dean of the University of Arizona, who made an inspection of the relics.

Many of the jars are inscribed with curious designs and crude drawings of snakes, centipedes and birds. Dean Cummings attributed the articles found to the Pihonse people, a long-headed race, predecessors of the later race known as the Pueblo people, who built Casa Grande.

Excepting the cliff dwellers' relics which were discovered near Flagstaff, these jars were said to be the oldest relics yet unearthed in Arizona.

HAD WINNING SLOGAN

Mrs. John F. Sippel of Baltimore, Md., with the campaign slogan of a "woman's place is in the home" won her the presidency of the General Federation of Women's Clubs over her "business woman" opponent at the annual convention held in San Antonio, Texas.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Helium

Helium is a wonderful element which is made from radium. It is through this process of its making that we can determine the age of rocks. Scientists know how long it required for radium to make it self into helium and by measuring the amount of each in certain rocks we can tell how long they have been there.

Scientists Digging Into Gardens of Hesperides

Algiers.—Encroachments of science must doubtless agitate the spirits of the Hesperides, those beautiful maidens who in Greek mythology guarded the golden apples which "Gaea, the Earth, produced as a marriage gift for Hera, wife and sister of Zeus.

In Morocco, near the legendary gardens of the Hesperides, archeologists are making fresh excavations of the ruins of ancient Luxus. This city was founded more than 2,000 years ago by the legions of the Caesars on the hillside close to the modern town of Larache.

There is profound interest among scientists in what valuable remnants of the old Roman civilization may be brought to light. A group of prominent French and other archeologists just completed an inspection of the ruins already uncovered.

Not Much Attraction

"We shall be changed in form perhaps," our favorite radio preacher recently declared, "but otherwise immortality will find us the way we are." Comforting to many, no doubt; but don't tell that to a man with hay fever and expect him to cheer—Farm and Fireside.

Mark Wild Bill's Grave for Admiring Tourists

Deadwood, S. D.—The last resting places of "Wild Bill" Hickok and "Calamity Jane," most noted of the early-day characters of the Black hills, are to be improved by Black hills residents. During recent years the graves of "Wild Bill" and "Calamity Jane" have been somewhat neglected. Massive stone and upon the monuments bronze tablets bearing relief portraits of the two famous characters will be placed. From 800,000 to 1,000,000 tourists are expected to visit the Black hills this year. Eight out of ten of them probably will make the hard climb up a steep highway to Mount Moriah cemetery, so they may view the graves of "Wild Bill" and "Calamity Jane."

End of Adventurous Journey

Sir Alan and Lady Cobham as they appeared standing on their glint flying boat Singapore after their arrival at Plymouth, England, recently, thus bringing to a conclusion their 22,000-mile flight around Africa, one of the longest and most adventurous pioneer air journeys ever made.

-:- Hope for Lepers -:-

San Francisco.—Possibility that leprosy is not contagious and that victims of the dread scourge need not be isolated in colonies of the so-called "living dead" was disclosed here by Dr. E. L. Walker, professor of tropical medicine in the University of California medical school.

The theory, supported for the first time by definite evidence, was advanced by the University of California scientist upon his return from a 14-months' stay in Honolulu.

Doctor Walker, who said his findings are only tentative, explained that the actinomyces bacteria need not be involved in leprosy, but that no laboratory evidence hitherto had been obtained to support the suspicion. This particular bacteria, classified as a plant fungus, is said to be a soft-growing organism, like that causing lockjaw. It appears reasonable to suppose then, according to Doctor Walker, that leprosy is an infection from the soil.

The theory is materially strengthened, according to the scientist's findings, by the known fact that leprosy is most prevalent in countries where the natives run barefoot. Investigation in these places, with the soil origin of infection in mind, the adoption of shoes and the careful disinfection of wounds, provided seemingly positive evidence of the truth of the new theory.

The stumbling block in the way of obtaining experimental proof that actinomyces is the actual cause of leprosy, Doctor Walker said, lies in the fact that animals other than man are immune to the disease. In other words, it is impossible to try these bacteria on any other way than on a human, and that is considered too dangerous. However, in his experiments in Hawaii Doctor Walker found them always present in leprosy tissue.

Hope of substantiation of the theory that leprosy is not contagious and that governments need not condemn the unfortunate victims to "living death" in a lepers' colony, Doctor Walker declared, lies in the East Belgian Congo, the Ivory coast of Africa and other known districts where the percentages of leprosy are high and where necessary experiments and observation may be made.

MENLO PARK

Better Service Asked

It is to be hoped the town council will take steps to compel one at least of the through busses to stop at Menlo Park. It is true there is a local service but the through busses make the trip in a third less time. Anyone desiring to take one of these busses must go to Palo Alto. The Railroad Commission regulates this but with a proper showing the concession would certainly be a big benefit to Menlo Park.

Attending Teachers College

Miss Bertha Kuck is attending the State Teacher's College at San Jose to increase her knowledge of pedagogy, which is highly commendable. She is the popular teacher in the local grammar school.

Property Owners Commended

All property owners are to be commended for their co-operation with the local civic bodies in burning the dry grass on their vacant lots, thus removing dangerous fire hazards.

Menlo Circus Drew Large Crowd

The Menlo Circus Club drew a large crowd to its track all week and particularly Wednesday. Several of the entries landed local stables in town during the week. The big racing events were witnessed by the elite of the peninsula.

Enjoy the Seabreezes at Seabright

James G. Mason and his two daughters have opened their cottage at Seabright for the summer months.

Improving His Property

Attorney White is having the brick wall around his estate, formerly the McClymont place, raised three feet which adds to the appearance of the property.

Busy Preparing for Bazaar

The ladies in charge of the bazaar to take place at the Corpus Christi Monastery are busy as bees preparing for the big event. The Monastery will be formally dedicated on July 28 and will be opened for the inspection of the public until August 5. The bazaar in all probability will be held in the Hall of the Nativity, not far from the monastery.

G. Gabrielli Dies

G. Gabrielli, for the past year night man at the railroad crossing at the Ok Grove crossing and for seventeen years employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, passed away at the railroad hospital in San Francisco last Tuesday. The deceased left a fortune of $70,000, mostly accumulated in the jewelry business in the east during his younger years. The deceased is survived by two sons in Italy. He was about seventy years old.

John Tuttle Given Contract

John Tuttle, Jr., has been given the contract to carry the mail daily from the depot to the postoffice. The Southern Pacific Company always did this work but owing to the increased business of the local office it had to give up the contract. The blonde haired youth is performing the duties of the office to perfection.

4th of July

Young America took the last look at the promised land on Wednesday for never again will fire crackers be used in town. The council will adopt an ordinance at its next meeting placing a ban upon the use of fire crackers within the town limits. The youngsters will also be hit in another way for the council is to pass the curfew law compelling them to be off the street at 8 o'clock. These regulations may seem severe to the boy, but it will tend to make a better man of him and that's what the home government is trying to do.

Appointed a Member of Force

Alex Easonne, the school janitor, has been appointed a member of the Menlo Park police force. He looks "one of the finest" in his natty new uniform.

Miss Braccoco to Teach Here

Miss Ruth Braccoco, the popular and talented young schoolmarm, has been appointed a member of the Menlo Park School department where she has been substituting for some time. Miss Braccoco is an accomplished musician.

School Bonds Carry

One hundred and three votes were cast at the school bond election on July 3, 83 having been cast for the bonds and 20 against the proposition. The $25,000 raised by the election is to be used in building additions to central school and the Fremont branch.

Miss Carleton to Teach

Miss Mary Carleton, who recently graduated with honors from the Teachers' College at San Jose, has secured a position as teacher in the Lomita Park School department. She is a bright and pretty girl who is sure to make a success in her chosen profession.

The Southern Pacific Company

has removed the benches around the wide-spreading oaks at the depot to dispose of the tramp element that make use of them in their moments of leisure. The other good people who occupied the benches at times were not considered.

Kelly Property Sold

W. L. Roper has purchased the J. Kelly property near Santa Cruz avenue through the real estate agency of W. J. Monroe. The sum of $5,000 was paid for the dwelling.

To Consider Annexation

At the meeting of the city council next Tuesday evening the matter of the annexation of Menlo Oaks will be up for hearing.

St. Patrick's Seminary and Timothy Hopkins will be represented at the meeting. The latter opposes the proposition and will meet the issue a every turn. It is to be hoped that the annexation of his choice territory takes place as the people of Menlo Oaks are anxious to come into this municipality to secure police protection and the benefits of the zoning laws which may prevent the accumulations of shacks in that choice residential district.

The assistant pastors of this diocese of the Catholic church are on retreat at St. Patrick's seminary. The pastors finished their retreat last Saturday.

The members of the Menlo Park Hoover for President Club will be present at the notification meeting at the Hoover home on the campaign.
